Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurAll your questions will be answered in this conclusion to the Whistleblower Trilogy...A month ago, the stranger at the bar warned Candle that involving himself in the companys dealings was going to lead him on the path to ruin. Only now does Candle understand the depth of that statement.For every move he makes to uncover the truth, the company counters. They spread lies and send men to kill him. They target his family and try to frame him for murder. This company harbors a terrible secret, and they'll commit heinous acts to keep it under wraps. He doesn't know who's on his side, and with all the players involved, anyone could be dangerous. But Candle knows one thing for sure: if he wants to secure permanent safety for his wife and unborn child, he's going to have to solve the riddle and expose the company, no matter what it costs. This final novella in the trilogy combines the action-packed chase thriller style with an amateur sleuth mystery, all told through protagonist Tucker Candle's unique and funny voice.

Just like the man in the John Denver song, he moved to Colorado in the summer of his 27th year, and never looked back. Aside from an extended break traveling the world, he hasn't let the Flatiron mountains out of his sight. He fell in love with writing at the age of fourteen with a copy of Stephen King's The Shining. Poetry became his first outlet for teen angst, then later some screenplays, and eventually short and long fiction. In between, he worked a few careers that never quite tickled his creative toes successfully, and hasn't ever forgotten about Stephen King. You can find him currently huddled over a laptop at an undisclosed location in Colorado, dreaming up ways to kill beloved characters.
